Which is why Deadlock plays the way it does Had this been a strategy game based around just the Galactica, it would have been about politics, sex, drama and toothpaste.. So when a ship starts taking damage from the front, it can turn around and show you its side, and you'll be starting all over again.. The reason for that is that ships can only be destroyed when you break through their hulls, and to do that you need to completely break through a certain part of its surface to do so.. Battles in Deadlock are relatively small in scale, which is for the best, because the game asks you to do a lot of fiddly little things every turn for each ship under your command.

The game's tactics are based around unit differentiation Some ships are fast, some are slow, some have fighters, some don't, some are strongest firing to the front, others from broadsides.. Both Colonial and Cylon forces are pretty evenly- matched, with a lot more variety in the type of ships available to you than you ever saw on TV..
